Activity: Draw a Super Hero & describe it's special powers | Creativity & imagination | 4 years

Skill development milestone

Children this age begin to create with intention — purposefully drawing a monster or a flower. By the time they are 5, many children add details and annotate with words and narrated stories. They can also listen to details and retell a story. Child listens attentively to age-appropriate stories. Child makes relevant comments during stories, especially those that relate to home and family events. The child enjoys stories with riddles, guessing, and "suspense."

With these newfound representational abilities, children's imaginations become boundless! They love pretend games and have a natural tendency to fantasize, experiment, and explore. They are fascinated with magic and struggle to distinguish between fantasy and reality. However, their creative drive ignites a desire to learn and supports intellectual development across all subjects. Thus, it is the perfect time to support the development of divergent thinking—where children generate unique solutions and make new connections without being tied to "the" one right answer or way of doing things (convergent thinking). Supporting divergent thinking means providing activities that allow for child appropriate inquiry, reflection, wondering, curiosity, and even supported confusion. Divergent thinking, and hence creativity and creative problem solving, are more than art — it is thinking, predicting, imagining, and creating.

The children are said to be at the pre-schematic stage. This stage is typical of children between the ages of 2 to 4.

Drawings become more complex, although they are usually unrealistic. Children will tend to use their favorite colors, rather than represent objects in accurate colors. Drawings of people are quite simple with few features. Objects in drawings float in space. They are not anchored. "Tadpole figure people" are drawn with a large head on a small body with extended arms. Interior and exteriors are shown at the same time.

They also play make-believe with toys, people and animals. Their games may incorporate puppets, animal figures, tool sets or doctor kits, vehicles, people, blocks and dress up clothes (can be a towel that becomes a skirt!), clay, play dough, pipe cleaners, paints, chalk, a variety of writing utensils. They can play board or card games now. They interact with and learn about the world through play activities.

Activity description

The child needs to select any one existing Super Hero with special, unique powers.

The child should draw the chosen Super Hero on paper & color it as per his/her liking. The drawing should be full body length. The child should name the Super Hero.

Once the child has completed the drawing, the child should record a video of self introducing the Super Hero and describing the Super Hero's special powers. The child should mention at least 3 unique special powers of the Super Hero. Submit the picture of the drawing & the video both as an entry for the event.
